

e-Learning Lingo Podcast Defines “Cognitive Flexible Learning Theory”

Waltham, Massachusetts – May 24, 2007

SyberWorks, Inc., a leader in custom e-Learning Solutions and the Learning Management System industry, today announces the next episode of the e-Learning Lingo Podcast Series about the term, Cognitive Flexible Learning Theory.

Dave Boggs, CEO of SyberWorks, states:

“This episode of the e-Learning Lingo Podcast series describes a learning theory that contains practical applications in the field of corporate training and development. For example, when developing a corporate training program, instruction must encourage learners not only to memorize facts and concepts, but also teach them how to apply these concepts to various work situations; which is where we see cognitive learning theory in action.”

About The e-Learning Lingo Podcast

The e-Learning Lingo Podcasts are created by SyberWorks, Inc. as a free service to academia, and a resource to the e-Learning industry at large. Each week, the e-Learning Lingo Podcast Series discusses one or two important terms used by professionals in the e-Learning industry. The e-Learning Lingo Podcast focuses primarily on terms used in e-Learning, Performance Management, and Human Capital Management. The podcasts themselves are very brief and are designed for busy executives or students who don't have a lot of time.
