

SyberWorks Media Center Presents a New Article – “Learning Management System (LMS) Hierarchies”

Waltham, Massachusetts – February 27, 2007

SyberWorks, Inc., a leader in custom e-Learning Solutions and the Learning Management System (LMS) industry, today announces a new article available in the SyberWorks Online Media Center: “Learning Management Systems (LMS) Hierarchies” by Dave Boggs, CEO of SyberWorks, Inc.

Dave Boggs, states:

“This article talks about learning management system hierarchies, and their value in helping companies mirror their organizational structures and fulfill their business objectives, as they manage and track their training programs.”

Boggs continues, “The article provides some practical examples of how LMS hierarchies are fashioned in various business configurations, such as in large retail chains or multinational corporations.”

Dave also writes two blogs in the e-Learning space. The first blog, the Boggs e-Learning Chronicle (<http://www.boggse-learningchronicle.typepad.com/>) covers news, trends, and observations about the e-Learning and web-based-training industries. His second blog, the Online Training Content Journal Blog (http://www.boggse-learningchronicle.typepad.com/the_online_training_cont/) discusses best practices, techniques, and trends in online training development and e-Learning instructional design.

Dave Bogg's article is located in the SyberWorks Online Media Center at http://www.syberworks.com/articles/lms_hierarchies.htm.
