

SyberWorks announces the launch of the Boggs e-Learning Chronicle Blog

Waltham, Massachusetts – June 23, 2005

SyberWorks, a leader in custom e-Learning Solutions and the Learning Management System industry, announced today that they have launched the Boggs e-Learning Chronicle Blog.

Dave Boggs, CEO of SyberWorks, states:

“I started the blog because I wanted to reach out to my customers and partners. The blog is a great forum for me to be able to share my thoughts and insights. It’s also a really quick way for me to dispense important information.”

Boggs says, “Many of the e-learning blogs are education market focused. In addition, there are several e-learning blogs whose primary audience is training professionals. More often than not, we work with training or human resource people. Today, all kinds of individuals in various job roles across an organization are coming into contact with and are making decisions about their company’s web-based learning management system or e-learning programs.”

Boggs continues, “The focus of the Boggs e-Learning Chronicle is to be an e-learning resource for the job roles that access and use a company’s web-based learning management system. It will provide information on many different facets and trends in the web-based training industry.”
