

SyberWorks Media Center Presents a New Article – “Use Case Scenarios for Classes, Courses, and Groups in Learning Management Systems (LMSs)”

Waltham, Massachusetts – May 21, 2007

SyberWorks, Inc., a leader in custom e-Learning Solutions and the Learning Management System (LMS) industry, today announces a new article available in the SyberWorks Online Media Center: “Use Case Scenarios for Classes, Courses, and Groups in Learning Management Systems” by Dave Boggs, CEO of SyberWorks, Inc.

Dave Boggs, states:

“This article discusses how classes, courses, and groups may be used in learning management systems to set-up training programs depending upon the company's business requirements and the internal organization of the learning management system itself.” Boggs continues, “The article provides some business and operational use case scenarios to help training managers develop and model learning management system configurations to fit their company's training program.”

Dave Boggs also writes two blogs in the e-Learning space. The first blog, the Boggs e-Learning Chronicle (<http://boggse-learningchronicle.typepad.com/>) covers news, trends, and observations about the e-Learning and web-based-training industries. His second blog, the Online Training Content Journal Blog (http://boggse-learningchronicle.typepad.com/the_online_training_content/) discusses best practices, techniques, and trends in online training development and e-Learning instructional design.
